Congress on the Capital.

2nd Session.

The Deputies met yesterday at 1-46 in the morning (?) Before re-opening the debate an amusing contest arose about who was to take the Chair, Sr. Alberdi declared he was willing to yield the time, Lawyers, and be good of Senator (2nd Vice) to take the place of the President. The Chair gentleman replied that he could not something to say, and if he was to be put. Dr. D. O. might be sure of being forced to resume his Chair, on the grounds that he had a right to discussion. Sr. Alcorta considered that he might as properly call on Sr. Castro as he was honored call but upon. All right! so said the Chair, and took his seat to turn.

Sr. Torrent, one of the Committee, opened the debate. He exposed at great length the nature of the question, advocating the necessity of our becoming and referred to the Convention of 1853 at the Congress of Santa Fé where it was agreed that by taking the capital of the Province Aires was supporting the power vince would find it in the same would be a simple error. He then read a letter from Sr. Gutierrez stated 1854, to the Congress that Buenos Aires would there be no Federal Union, no development of that Province, to make a National republic. Sr. Castro also stated that he had voted against such an error.

Sr. Torrent examined—I do not wish to make any charges—I merely consider that the Province opposed to communication should not be a source of union. After a most pitiful story of the misery and ruin involved on the Republic by the violation of the Convention, he recommended that Buenos Aires should be left to herself, that she was not the true source of Federal Union, and that the war would be carried on by the Provincials alone. He then read a letter from Sr. Gutierrez, stating that the Province of Buenos Aires was the true source of the Federal Union, and that the Provincials would be left to themselves.

Sr. Alcorta considered

portance he must have the property of the Church for Divine residence in coming to residence. Then the Papal singers chanted Kyrie Eleison, and the words were taken up in a loud sound from voice to voice of this vast scene, and the Litany of the Saints was sung by the monks, professors such a body of sound as I had never heard before, and electrifying every one who had the slightest feeling. This terminated, the Cardinal Procurator again advanced, and renewed his demand for the consecration instante et instantiùs. The Pope still hesitated, and I saw the fervid prayers of the assembly such the way have the lightened the countenance of the Holy Spirit in so important a determination. Prayers were offered, and then the Veni Creator Spiritus was intoned and chanted by the vast multitude. So touching—the tones, and so softly, yet so mightily, they swelled and swelled as they were borne from wave to wave on transport, that the effect was overwhelming, and I found myself closing fast to my seat and almost suffocated with emotion. The Credi also was chanted and final application, in the words Accipe, consecra, et consummare, and then His Holiness rose, and took up the key of Divine light, he had determined on enrolling the Beati in the catalogue of saints, and pronounced in a few moments Decernimus. The intelligence is communicated to the world by the firing of cannon from St. Angelo and the ringing of all the bells in the city, and the Pope likewise, with his keys, full voice, intones the Te Deum, in which the vast multitude joins. It was the finishing of prayer and praise. Protestantism, Protestants, and Protestantism! I must—I must—I must be with the Church of Rome. I must bring myself to submit to her authority, be united, come out of the world, and go to the communion of saints. Protestantism dies, dying and rotting in itself, the very seeds of its own corruption.—Times' Correspondent.
